

Cave Art

Period B

Cave art has been around since 40,000 - 10,000 BC. Many of the Cave art pieces found have drawings of animals, humans, weapons, maps and many more. This art was usually found on walls, ceilings, floors and on sides of caves. Cave art was drawn with colors of red, brown, yellow and black, which was probably made with animal blood and fat. Cave art has been found all over the world some of these places are, Europe, France, Spain, Italy, Portugal, and Germany. In all of these countries many Cave art drawings were found in different areas. The oldest cave art was found in Europe in the country, France. No one knows why they drew what they did, some people think they were showing religion or they used it to communicate with each other. There are many more theories on cave art, but none of them can be called true.

So as you can see, Cave art was a big part back then because they found it in so many places. Even back then without pens, pencils, and other things we use today, they still could draw by using there nearby resources like the animal fat and blood. Basically without them we wouldn't be able to do all of the things or have the things we do today. That is what cave art is and some information about it.
